Laplander dives into role

By Houghton Daily Mining Gazette staff

HANCOCK - Houghton Canal View's new leader officially started work Friday.

Adam Laplander was named as the Houghton County medical care facility's new chief executive officer and administrator in August. Prior to his new position, he served as Canal View's comptroller for the past four years.

He replaces Kim Salmi, who resigned from the position in March.

"It's been a plan with our board and the organization for a long time," he said. "We've had succession planning in place, it's just taking place a little bit sooner than we expected."

As administrator, Laplander is responsible for strategic planning, growth and overseeing daily operations. He is also tasked with knowing guidelines, rules and regulations for various boards and agencies.

"It's rewarding, because every day is different," he said. "No day is the same. Health care is constantly changing. And that includes us, and we're constantly changing.'

A Calumet High School graduate, Laplander went on to earn a bachelor's of science and master's degrees in accounting from Michigan Technological University. He also served as a sergeant in the U.S. Marine Corps. To qualify to be licensed as an administrator for a health care facility, he also completed additional education through Madonna University.

Before coming to Canal View as comptroller, Laplander was a financial analyst for Aspirus Keweenaw Hospital, also serving as an adjunct instructor for the business school at Michi-

"I've always been more on the finance side of things, on the business side of things," he said. "And to dive into this role, and seeing where we can improve and be productive in each and every area of the organization is really what drew me to it, and it presents a whole new set of challenges. So it's exciting.'

One of his immediate priorities is growth. Last fall, staffing was still 30% below pre-COVID levels, meaning 70 beds could not be filled.

Canal View is planning to open a ground-floor rehab unit with 16 beds on Oct. 1. The new staff positions required for the unit drew a high number of applicants, Laplander said.

Staff levels are also rising elsewhere in the facility, with the facility seeing its highest numbers in summer orientation, he said.

"We have a great team, we have a great staff," he said. "I really believe it's truly a great place to come to work. I believe we provide great care to our residents. And it's a great community organization that is a staple in this community. And we just have that as a plan to continue on, and we'll get back to the place where we were.'

One effort that had been talked about as a possible attraction for employees was a child care center built next to Canal View, with employees given priority for slots. That idea has been tabled for now, Laplander

"Right now, we're going to put our efforts into our strategic plan to grow and to get staff back into the workforce, into our organization," he said. "It's definitely something we'll look at down the road."

The CDC eased many of the COVID-19 restrictions in place during the height of the pandemic last fall. Precautions are still taken when a case is discovered. Thursday, visitors were required to put on masks upon entering the building due to a recent positive test from a resident.

"A lot of the regulations have changed, but we will continue to do everything that we can do to ensure that our residents are safe,' Laplander said. "So, if cases rise, or an outbreak occurs, we'll follow recommendations and regulations.'

Ryan Street Community Garden raising funds to preserve site

By Houghton Daily Mining Gazette staff

HANCOCK - The Ryan Street Community Garden is raising funds to purchase the land and keep it open to the public as a Hancock city park.

The garden was started in 2010 on property owned by Finlandia University, which went into receivership when the university closed this

The goal is to raise $6,000 over a 60-day period to go towards the purchase of the land. If the garden reaches or exceeds that amount, the Michigan Economic Development Corp.'s Public Spaces and Community Spaces grant will match all donations. It's the same grant program the city used last year to help get a dog park.

The Patronicity page for the fundraiser went online Monday. Since then, the garden has raised more than $3,600.

Donations of any size can help, said Amanda Lounibus, the garden's coordinator.

"If we go over, that's even better, because then it's supporting the city's efforts, too," she said. "Because it's right downtown, it's a very special piece of land. And all these beds have been established, so it would be a shame to lose it.

The city of Hancock is also contributing funds. And the garden is also looking for additional grants that could help, Lounibus said.

"Between those three, what we were trying to do is get a community effort, rather than the city covering the whole thing," she said. "That's our garden philosophy anyway, is encouraging people to contribute, that whole community spirit here. We just encourage a lot of volunteerism."

To be part of the garden, the gardeners have to contribute eight hours of community service.

The garden provides educational and volunteer opportunities throughout the year.

Any community member who wants a plot can apply for the season, Lounibos said. Currently, there are 19 gardeners and 25 plots; some people have more than one. There are also beds where everybody pitches in and shares fruits and vegetables like berries and asparagus. Collectively, they feed about 50 people, Lounibos said. "I really enjoy it, I think more for the community experience, even more so than the gardening part," Lounibos said. "But everybody has their different reasons. Some people just love to garden and they love being here. Like a mental health break.

Each plot costs between $17 and $19 for the season, depending on size. The garden has all the necessary tools on-hand. For newer members, the other gardeners also supply the know-

"I really didn't know anything about gardening when I started, and you just learn a lot from the other members," Lounibos said.

The garden was built along the path Finlandia University students used to cross the property; anyone is still welcome to use the space, Lounibos said.

The garden also does educational outreach. Student groups come for tours, amd members also helped the Ryan Center preschool start its own garden at its playground. Copper Country Intermediate School District students have also helped out, building a counter with a sink and helping clear out debris.

For the most part, the garden doesn't fundraise, instead charging minimal dues and receiving in-kind donations. The city provides water and mulch: other friends of the garden also contribute manure, straw and other need-

'Usually when I ask for anything, people pitch in and help, so that's been really fun for me," she

"I wasn't born here, but I started gardening here right after I moved here, so it really enabled me to become a community member quickly," she said. "This is a nice place to meet people, give back a little if you're interested.

People can donate online at patronicity.com/project/ryan_street_gardens#!. They can also send donations by mail to City of Hancock, RSCG, 399 Quincy St., Hancock, MI 49930.

Island executive chef draws on experience

By Escanaba Daily Press staff

HARRIS Executive Chef Kristina Pomeroy originally from Stonington but now based in Escanaba has worked in the kitchens of the Island Resort and Casino for 22 years.

During her teen years, she worked as a dishwasher at Jack's Restaurant in Rapid River. Her introduced to food preparation began toward the end of her time there.

"Just by watching them cooking ... really kind of piqued an interest in it," said Pomerov.

But her role with food at Jack's was limited to helping get the fish ready for fish fry Fridays. Upon finishing high school, she left to explore other avenues.

After graduation, Pomeroy moved away and tried her hand at a couple of other things – none of which truly resonated with the young woman.

It didn't take long for Pomeroy to realize she missed the Upper Peninsula. She moved back, and when her mother who worked at the Island - suggested Pomeroy look into the open cook position there, she gave it a shot.

"It was just a stopping point to figure out what I wanted to do with my life. And then I found out it was what I wanted to do," Pomeroy explained.

At the time, she was not expecting her path to unfold the way it did.

"I said, 'Well, I kind of know how to cook," said Pomeroy of her foray into applying for that first line cook job $2\bar{2}$ years ago. "Then I sort of worked my way up after I realized that this was the real

From line cook, Pomeroy went on to become lead cook, then head cook. Today, she wears a coat embroidered with "Kristina Pomeroy -Executive Chef."

Over the years, the Island has grown. Pomeroy said that when she first started, there was "one restaurant and one little snack bar." At present, fifteen food and drink outlets are on the premises, and only a couple of them are bars that serve beverages only. Pomeroy's focus as executive chef is primarily in the full service convention center - which provides all the food service for weddings and other events - and Horizons Steakhouse on the top floor, but she can and does go wherever needed.

"We've cross-trained each other," said the Island's food and beverage director, Stephen Gakstatter. "Out of everybody here, I can confidently say that Kristina's had her fingerprint on everything, pretty much."

It might seem natural for Pomeroy's career to have developed as her experience grew and Island Resort and Casino expanded, but her position and culinary expertise were not attained without ef-

"I just worked hard, took every extra shift I could, and found every opportunity to learn everything I could and you know, work my way up," said Pomeroy. "It's been fun."

"And I've got to see quite a bit of it," added Gakstatter, who came to the Island seven vears ago. "And I'm very proud of her. She's amazing.' Gakstatter said that he first met Pomeroy and others who are now colleagues while he was district manager at Sysco. Island Resort and Casino was one of the wholesale distributor's major accounts.

Since working more closely with Pomeroy, Gakstatter said that he "always marveled" at her abilities and "how many outlets she managed."

In all the years of the Island's operation, though, a cooking show in front of a live audience has never been done. The partnership with the Daily Press for the upcoming event of Sept. 14 is new territory.
